Lexus Ireland recalls CT200h

 JULY 1, 2016

Lexus Ireland is carrying out a voluntary recall of certain CT200h vehicles. The period of manufacture extends from December 2010 until January 2015.

The vehicles concerned are equipped with an evaporative fuel control unit (canister) that is mounted in the fuel tank. There is a possibility that cracks could develop in the outer portion of the canister due to improper shaping. As a result of this condition, the cracks could expand over time and, eventually, fuel may leak from these cracks when the vehicle has a full tank of petrol. For all involved vehicles, Toyota and Lexus dealers will replace the canister with an improved one.

There are 407 affected vehicles on the Irish market.
