Teething SOS recalls amber teething jewellery

📅 MARCH 27, 2013

At the request of the National Consumer Agency, 'Teething SOS' is carrying out a voluntary recall of its 'Honey Bean' amber teething necklaces and bracelets for children under 36 months due to a potential choking risk.

These items have been sold through the Teething SOS website and other retail outlets. Test results have indicated that there is a potential risk of choking. The tests also found that the beads broke apart and some shattered when force was applied, releasing small parts that could pose a choking/inhalation hazard.

What to do:

If you have purchased one of these items of jewellery please stop using it immediately. You can get more information on the recall, and how to receive a refund, on the Teething SOS website, www.teethingsos.ie or you can call Teething SOS on 094 9257115. We have more information on amber teething jewellery in the product safety section of our website.
